FOURTH SUNDAY OF EASTER

El Salvador En Mi Corazón (cont.)

APRIL 29, 2012

The ASB El Salvador Team members happily continue to offer their reflections for their trip from March 23-30. We hope your hearts are broken and knitted back together by the grace of the Risen Christ.

~Fr. Isaiah Mary OP

Before El Salvador, I had already traveled to Latin America and knew about the poverty, the terrible presidents, and the machismo that ruled the region. I went prepared to learn about the issues that plague Latin America and Central America as a whole, but I wanted to experience it with my peers, who I now call my friends, and take the time to reflect in order to transform my faith. It's true that the main goal of the trip was to learn more about the Catholic Church's role in El Salvador during the civil war, but I, personally, learned much more. As I questioned God and reconciled with him on a regular basis, I discovered more about our humanity, how poverty is so universal, and how impunity exists without any challenges. I started to wonder about my role as a Christian, student at Stanford, and citizen of this world.

Having daily Mass and a book to write down our reflections felt so empowering and appeasing, especially after the many talks with supreme court justices, environmentalists, young American girls working with juvenile gang members, and all of the people we met who shared anecdotes of their difficult lives but always with a hopeful tone. Despite hearing the terrible stories of girls being raped by parents and becoming pregnant at the age of fourteen, the desperation to do something about it turned into this faithful purpose under the guidance of God. I wanted to talk more and more to God, and my ears and heart opened up more than they had ever before to let him guide me throughout the trip. I can't explain how weak, strong, infuriated, yet utterly happy I felt all at once during the trip. I can't explain how it feels to have been in the Capilla Providencia where Monseñor Oscar Romero was assassinated, but I can say this: God has a plan for all of us. No matter if we choose to believe in future plans from above, or if, like me, we believe that praying won't stop transnational companies like Kimberley-Clark or Pacific Rim to engage in mining and contaminate the limited water sources of El Salvador, God will take us where we have to be and give us the strength to walk through the most difficult of ways.

El Salvador was a difficult journey and one I never thought of embarking, but I trusted the warmth in my heart and listened to the little voice in my mind. God wanted me in El Salvador, and he will probably take me back to El Salvador this summer. Being in El Salvador can make anyone question God because of all the misery and stagnation that leads to nowhere. We can choose to give-up, not believe, and just blame God and others for the misery. However, I blindly chose to take God's hand, hear God as he spoke through the people, and allowed him to enter my heart as he challenged me to carry my faith unto others. Thanks to the help of my parents and friends and the Catholic Community, I raised the money, I made friends with whom I share this secret journey. Thanks to God, I was guided with his love through a week that has forever changed me.

Andi Clark, 2015

Early Sunday morning, we pulled up to the edge of Parque Cuzcatlán in a bus and, piled out onto the dusty street in a chattering herd. But our initial levity soon vanished under the knowledge of why we were there. We hadn't come to play soccer or have a picnic, but rather to see the Monument to Memory and Truth, which encompasses a large part of the one of the walls of the park and lists all of the civilian deaths, disappearances and massacres that took place across 12 years of civil war. It's a painfully inadequate statement to say that the list on that wall was a long one. But what hurt even more than seeing these thousands of names was the knowledge that, my own feeble attempts to internalize the pain and the immense human tragedy represented here would be greatly in vain. Behind each of these names was a person whose abrupt absence merited the deep grief and agony of a whole web of family, friends, and neighbors. And all that the greater world knew of them was that they had once existed and the particular collection of syllables that had comprised their name. It seemed to do little justice to the situation.

As I walked up and down this numbing sea of letters, my eyes, by a providential stroke of luck, happened upon a name that I recognized. I had met Ernesto Sibrian on this very trip almost a year before, and had heard his story as one of the "disappeared", of being kidnapped as an infant, growing up in New Jersey, discovering his identity and eventually reuniting with his family in El Salvador. And there, five feet from my face, was his name, etched in a marble wall, more permanent than I could guess. I will never truly know nor understand what deep sorrow earned those names a place on that wall. But I came to realize what it means to remember. To remember is not to confront the litany of iniquities in the world as names and numbers, as a crushing statistic that paralyzes with the horror of the inhumanity that could have wrought such pain. To remember is to recognize that the stories of individuals, filled with their own particular beauty and anguish and strength, are not isolated occurrences, but are rather surrounded by and in solidarity with innumerable others in the history of humanity.

Refrain

**go forth in mis - sion,*

1: Repeat Refrain
2-5: to Verses

All have been given to drink of the Spirit
So that the gifts of our God may abound,
So that the thirsty may find living water
And the good news of the kingdom may resound.

Sharing the one bread, we are made one body,
A priestly people to serve the one Lord,
A holy city upon a hill top,
Beacon of hope for the outcast and the poor.

Home for the homeless and food for the hungry,
Justice and dignity for the oppressed:
This is the worship of God's holy people,
This is the feast of the breaking of the bread.

Your love, O Lord, has now drawn us together
That we may offer thanksgiving and praise,
Learning again of our call and our mission
To be a sign and a sacrament of your grace.

Apostle's Creed

I believe in God,
the Father almighty,
Creator of heaven and earth,
and in Jesus Christ,
his only Son, our Lord,
who was conceived by the Holy Spirit,
born of the Virgin Mary,
suffered under Pontius Pilate,
was crucified, died and was buried;

he descended into hell;
 on the third day he rose again from the dead;
 he ascended into heaven,
 and is seated at the right hand of God,
 the Father almighty;
 from there he will come to judge
 the living and the dead.

I believe in the Holy Spirit,
 the holy catholic Church,
 the communion of saints,
 the forgiveness of sins,
 the resurrection of the body,
 and life everlasting. Amen.

Far too late have I begun to love you;
 you were there within me, I was outside,
 and I sought you, seeing blindly just beyond myself;
 and poured away like water,
 I took flight from you and I was lost,
 surrounded by such beauty which is not you.

Then you called and cried aloud to me,
 breaking through the silence of my deafness,
 Dazzling brightness, you appeared to me,
 and at once you put to flight my blindness.
 Drawing deep, I smell your fragrant presence,
 still I gasp for breath and long for you.
 Since I tasted you I only thirst and hunger after you.
 How, with a simple touch, your fire consumes me.
 Now my heart, aflame and blazing,
 leaps to you for peace.
